Categorization of data

Public	The information is publicly available and personal data is anonymised or the information can be made accessible to anyone without any restrictions. Its disclosure poses no threat to CU or other institutions or persons.	publicly accessible research reports open access publications open-source software press statements of the university information published by the university, faculty or other unit promotional materials content of public websites open research data internal regulations published on website public information on services
Internal	The information is not publicly available and is intented for the internal use for CU. Disclosure outside CU may cause material or non-material damage. Before sharing information, it is necessary to assess whether the information needs to be protected under regulations or contractual terms and whether the information needs to be anonymised.	internal correspondence grant applications web articles prior to publication minutes of meetings internal directives and regulations document templates development strategies and plans of CU educational materials for training and courses unpublished research reports
Protected	The information is not publicly available and its protection is required by regulations or contractual terms. Disclosure outside a specified group of authorised individuals is likely to cause damage or harm with serious and irreversible consequences, as personal data breaches and data leaks are likely.	Any personal data of any natural person, such as: - wage and economical data of employees, - contact details and personal data of students and employees, - sensitive data (data revealing racial or ethnic origin, political opinions, religious or philosophical beliefs, or trade union membership, genetic data, biometric data, data concerning health or data concerning a natural person's sex life or sexual orientation), - budget spreadsheets containing personal data, -ID numbers, CU personal number, personal identity number, - bank account number, - personal data related to employee evaluation research data containing highly confidential or classified information non-public financial records valuable research data (such as data providing competitive advantage)

	access data (e.g. passwords or encryption keys)